Marquetry is the art of creating decorative designs and images by skillfully using the beads, shapes and colors of thin veneers and sometimes other materials such as shells or ivory. While the exact origin of marquetry is unknown, it is known that ancient artifacts came up with techniques to create objects decorated with delicate instalation of wood, stone, metal, shell, bone, ivory and other exotic materials. They will cars out a niche and fill the result void with the material of their choice, using glue made by heating the bones or skin of animals or fish. Egyptian carp and paintings indicated that veneers were cut with copper adzes and applied as decorative elements to the coffin. At this time the job of inlaying is also widespread, so it is possible to imagine that it does not take long for craftsman to start experimenting with designs formed from different veneers. In the mid-16th century, innovations in spring control clocks led to the development of fretsaw, a handheld tool that could be used to precisely cut the indentation elements. The fretsaw consisted of a U-shaped metal frame on which was stretched a narrow blade made from a clock spring, at the time the best and uniform steel was available. These relatively thin blades have been given very good teeth which are well suitable for cutting thin wooden sheets and other materials. With the ability to now very accurately cut thin sheets of wood, bones, ivory, shells and other materials into almost arbitrary complex shapes, 16th-century craftsmans begin to piece together materials and shapes into more complex images. The approach, now known as marquetry from the French marqueteur (inscorded as on a piece of furniture), involves cutting, fitting and gluing pieces of material into a single sheet and then gluing the result sheet down to one Background. Thus, marquetry differs significantly from the inmed in that the design was basically completed before being attached to the end of the furniture, furniture, rather than being used as an component in the end. The earliest known example of marquetry in 1563 was from Breslau, Germany. Over the next few centuries, marquetry schools were established in France, Germany and the Netherlands. In the early 17th century, marquetry largely replaced decorative insym in furniture. Floral design and seaweed marquetry (in symmetrical form, foliate rolls) became quite popular design elements in the furniture of this period. Patterns (commonly known as parquet floors) are also quite common. Finally, the marquetry extends west from Europe to america and beyond. Today there are slightly more than a handful of professional marquetarians. [Quote ending] Some of us (TheMusicHouse.Com) know, reside in Sorrento and Ercolano Italy.
